"I board the 09.23 am local train to work, as I've been doing for the past fifteen years. I love the rush, the clamour and the endless conversations - highs and lows of the stock market, Maradona's coaching skills, Obama's Afghan policy, Bollywood's latest blockbuster, the list goes on!

The interesting debates are interrupted by the appearance of Sen babu and his boxful of delightful Bengali sweets. Seen sulking in a corner is D'Souza; overweight and now on a strict diet. Someone reads a funny SMS. Everyone laughs aloud. As ever, Jignesh bhai, the cloth merchant is snoring by his window seat. For him, we never existed. And before I know, it's time to get off. I wave goodbye, knowing that I shall meet them again. Tomorrow at 09.23 am."
